

Wedding Bouquet . . .

Not sure whether you should throw your wedding bouquet to the single girls or keep it for your memories?

Here are a few good reasons to keep your wedding bouquet and also ideas about keeping it without upsetting anyone.

Flowers and bouquets play a vital (and costly) role in your perfect wedding day and it would be a shame if they wilted after a week and were thrown out.

For example, your bridal bouquet is traditionally thrown to all the single girls at the end of the wedding. What happens after that is anyone's guess; the lucky girl may take it home and treasure it awaiting her own wedding day, or she may intend to keep it but forget to take it home and leave it on the bridal table of the reception venue.

Whatever happens, you may want to throw a display bouquet or even just a single flower for the girls to fight over.

Or are you wondering why you would want to keep your flowers at all? The flowers you chose for your wedding would have been flowers that were special to you, ones you love and maybe ones your partner bought you on your first date? Preserving them means you have a reminder of your special day and something to show future generations of aspiring brides.
